There is a grocery house on the corner, fronting on Hill street, and next to it, for which the work was being don near which the startling discovery was made. The plumbers had broken earth for the trench in which the sewer connection pipe was to be laid. They excavated perhaps six eight inches the entire length of the

He made another effort t drive the spade into the earth, but it met with resistance as before, the grating sounds with resistance as before, the grating sounds striking more harshly upon the ear. His companion heard the sounds and also noticed the dismay depicted on the ditch-digger's countenance. He saw him suddenly drop his tool and step hastily from the trench into the yard several feet away, where he stood seemingly riveted to the spot, paralyzed with fear and unable to utter a word. paralyzed with lear and unable to utter a word. One of them walked over to where the other had been digging, but his eyes had no sooner fallen upon the object which had struck so much terror to the soul of his companion than he, too, incontinently fled from the spot. After the effect of the shock of terror had partially subsided they looked toward each other, but it was some minutes before either could summon courage enough to ore either could summon courage enough to speak. "Bones!" was the first word uttered, but it came straight from his lungs, which had been inflated to their fullest capacity in his efforts to resist the terrible fear water had taken such hold on his physical system "YES, HUMAN BONES!"

One of them had to pass the stationhouse, when he sounded the alarm and the "pee "caught the infection. "A human skele-las been unearthed up in northeast emphis," was the first greeting the newsgathers received, and they too were droused not with fear-that element is not of their composition-but with eager anxiety to get at the bottom of the sensation. Their fertile brains were at work already shaping up the sensation, unrolling the musty pages of mem-ory in search of some incident in the past with which to associate the discovery. They seemed to be hiding away from the news men, but their eagerness for a genuine sensation urged them on to a diligence of search that could not so early be evaded, and their hiding place was unearthed. Esquire Spelman, the first one found, at first refused to talk, but Captain Hackett happening on the spot at the same moment, related the result of their visit. With the utmost care he employed both hands in removing the earth from over and around the skull until it could be raised from its mysterious resting place. When it was being raised up the Captain was suddenly seized with an uncontrollable fit of laughter, which caused the 'Squire to look at him with annzement. "It's only a dog's bones. Don't you see it's nothing but a dog? Them bones ain't no man's bones, they ain't. They ain't long enough, you see? Them bones ain't shaped right for a man. Look at that jaw bone?" He was not on duty at the time, but hastened down the alley toward Second street, and at its intersection with Second alley he found a woman covered with blood, which was flowing freely from wounds which she said had just been inflicted by a colored man who had fled on the approach of the cuttist, but, although having something of a record for running, was unable to catch up with him. Seeing that his game was about to escape he cracked away with his pistol once or twice hoping to bring him to a stand, but without avail. The man made good his escape. Returning to where he left the woman, he found that she, too, was gone, having escape. Returning to where he left the wo-man, he found that she, too, was gone, having been taken away by friends. Editors of the Memphis Appeal: Editors of the Memphis Appeal:

Our corn crops are ruined, and cotton is but little better. Most people charge the misfortune to the hot weather, but I have an idea that some of the blame may be laid to other causes. It will be remembered that about the beginning of the crop season a story was going the rounds of the press, from which it spread into all the neighborhoods round about, that the first of June had been predicted by an old crone styled Mother Shipton as the date on which the world would come to an end. Where ignorance prevailed this story was believed, and it got such a hold this story was believed, and it got such a hold on the minds of the negroes that it became nearly impossible to get work out of them. They appeared more interested in the salvation of their souls than in making anything to live on. The consequence was, that in-stead of devoting their attention to their employers' work they spent the time in singing and praying, in religious gatherings, and the crops were hardly half worked. It is unfor-tunate for the farmers, but more so for the laborers, since they are without the means of subsistence in a year of crop failures, and the wners of the farms have barely enough their own keeping and none to spare for the indelent class, especially when there is no showing of even getting labor in re-turn. Some of these people are suffering now for the want of the plainest necessaries of life, and their suffering will be intensified should the coming winter prove half as seere as was the past one.

The citizens of the neighborhood enjoyed a "big" barbecue yesterday—plenty to eat and drink, and a large crowd to eat and drink it. The early part of the day was taken up in speech-making, Mr. I. L. Douglass being the orator of the occasion. There was no politics, but a general participation ings. Later in the day dancing was indulged in by old and young, the former element vieing with their offspring in liveliness and gaiety. To a rational man it would seem shooting gallery, where some excellent skill was manifest. Some of the boys from the city had some fun with their sporting traps, but I do not think they made more than enough to pay expenses.

The of Planters, Cotton Pressnen and shippers of cotton generally, the McComb Tie Company, of New York, sole proprietors and manufacturers of said Tie, commanding unequaled facilities, have, in addition to their large stock on hand, contracted for increased quantities, sufficient to meet the largest demand for Cotton Ties to cover the entire crap of the coming season, and now, through their Agents generally, offer the popular and irrepressible ARROW TIE at the lowest market price, in bundles complete, it being the purpose of the Company to merit the continued patronage of the planting commanity, and defy all competition that may arise. The buckles are now securely riveted to the band, thus preventing the loss of same in shipping, and making a stronger Tie.
